Prosecutor Says Law Allows It—

Harris Defends Man's Right To Kill

By J. NELSON TAYLOR

A man's right to kill in self-defense has been upheld by the Oklahoma Supreme Court in a decision that clearly states the law on this subject. The decision of the court is based on the facts presented in the case and not on any interpretation or construction of the law. The decision is in harmony with the decisions of the United States Supreme Court and the other courts of the United States.

The case involves a man who was killed in self-defense. The defendant was charged with murder, but the court ruled that he was justified in killing the victim in self-defense. The court held that the defendant had no legal duty to retreat and that he was justified in killing the victim in self-defense. The court also ruled that the defendant was entitled to rely on the law of self-defense.

The court's decision is in harmony with the decisions of the United States Supreme Court and the other courts of the United States. The court has clearly stated the law on this subject and it is clear that the defendant was justified in killing the victim in self-defense.
