RIOTERS BLANKET BEACHES
3,000 Deal Police Misery

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Outnumbered by police officers on the beach, members of the black community refused to let a curfew on whites keep them from protesting the violence and racism they say they experienced in the city.

Protesters, who had gathered in large numbers on the beach, were met by a police force that used tear gas to disperse the crowd. Some protesters were injured, but no serious injuries were reported.

Wickersham Tells Story Of Slaying

By P. O. BURTON

"You've got a little boy in Fort Lauderdale, aren't you," said one of the protesters. "Are you going to let him die?

"We're not going to let him die," another protester replied. "We're going to fight for our rights and we're going to fight for justice."

The protest continued into the night as police officers continued to use tear gas and rubber bullets to disperse the crowd. The city mayor declared a state of emergency and called for federal intervention.

"We're going to fight for our rights," the protesters continued. "We're going to fight for our lives."

The protest ended after several hours when the police officers dispersed the crowd with tear gas and rubber bullets. Some protesters were injured, but no serious injuries were reported.

State Politicians Study Races

Demos Looking Ahead To '68

By J. F. KENT

Democrats are planning major changes to the party's platform in response to the events of the past year. The platform will be released in the next few weeks, kicking off a campaign to win the upcoming presidential election.

The new platform will focus on issues such as civil rights, economic inequality, and foreign policy. It will also address the role of the government in the economy, and the need for stronger social programs.

Democrats are hoping to appeal to a broad range of voters, including younger and minority voters. They are also hoping to attract support from independent voters and those who are dissatisfied with the Republican Party.

"We need to focus on issues that matter to ordinary people," said a Democratic strategist. "We need to make the case that the Republican Party is not on the side of the American people."

In a move to prevent the spread of a disease that has killed millions of chickens, the state is giving away milk to children. The state has been under pressure to do something about the disease, which has been spreading at an alarming rate. The state has been criticized for not doing enough to prevent the disease, and the move to give away milk is seen as a way to demonstrate that the state is taking the problem seriously.

Attorney To Seek Release Of Student

A state attorney is seeking the release of a student who was arrested for allegedly engaging in a protest. The attorney argues that the student was wrongfully arrested and that the student should be released. The attorney is hoping that the court will agree with his arguments and release the student.

10 Warm Up For Runoffs

By Jack Carter

The state Republican and Democratic parties are preparing for a "very important" runoff on March 25.

The Democratic primaries have already closed, but the Republican party has a number of candidates still running in the runoff. The Republicans are currently leading in all five races, but the runoff is expected to be a close one.
