OSU 'Atmosphere' Getting Cloudier

BY JOE CASTER

STILLWATER — About 100 OSU students and faculty members Thursday, only half the expected number showed up for the first "academic atmosphere" meeting, the school's attempt to combat the rumor that OSU is "anti-Semite." The student body met in the afternoon at the University of Oklahoma — the place where the OSU students were located. The students are members of some of the most important Jewish clubs on campus and claim that charges of anti-Semitism have been leveled against them.

The meeting was never called to order because most of the speakers were late. The discussion centered around the charges of anti-Semitism and whether or not there was any truth to the rumors. The meeting was adjourned after several hours, some members of the audience refusing to leave the meeting room.

The following week's meeting was scheduled for noon on the first floor of the library. The meeting was canceled because of the weather and it was not held. The meeting was also canceled for the following week.
