200 Search For Missing Girl, 6

BY DON RAY

A 6-year-old Midwest City girl named Cheryl E. Smith vanished from her home on Wednesday. The girl, who was last seen playing with her 3-year-old sister in their backyard, was last seen at 3:00 p.m.

Cheryl's mother, Miss E. M. Smith, a teacher at Midway Elementary School, was despondent when she reported the disappearance of her daughter. "I can't believe it," she said. "She was just like any other child." Miss Smith said that her daughter had been with her younger sister, who was playing in the yard.

The girl's father, Mr. J. S. Smith, also a teacher at Midway, was in tears as he described the situation. "She's just like any other child," he said. "I just can't believe she's not here." Mr. Smith said that his daughter had been with her younger sister, who was playing in the yard.

Family Perish

Traffic deaths topped the local news Thursday when two Oklahoma newspaper carriers, O'Neal Sennett and Pauline Sennett, were killed in a head-on collision near Davis. The couple was returning from a wedding in Stillwater when the accident occurred.

Two other members of the Sennett family, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sennett and their daughter, were also killed in the crash. The family had been traveling in a station wagon when the accident occurred.

A third family member, Mr. and Mrs. John Sennett and their son, were also killed in the crash. The family had been traveling in a station wagon when the accident occurred.

The Sennett family was known for their tight-knit family, and their passing has left a void in the community.

When you serve a vintage St. Emilion, you serve it at the right moment... or you don't know how to run an airplane.

(A Brief Frigates Report)

When an aircraft's growth is proceeding at a virtually explosive rate, it's best to know the right moment to serve an airplane. This is particularly true for airplanes that are designed for growth, such as the Boeing 747, which was first introduced in 1969 and has since gone through several major design changes. In fact, the Boeing 747 was designed from scratch, with the emphasis on growth and flexibility. The airplane's fuselage can be extended to accommodate various types of aircraft, from passenger planes to cargo aircraft. The Boeing 747 has also been used as a basis for the development of other aircraft, such as the Boeing 767 and 777.

It seems, then, that there has been a major change in the way airplanes are designed and manufactured. The Boeing 747 is not alone in this. Many other aircraft manufacturers are designing airplanes that are capable of accommodating a wide range of missions. This is particularly true for long-haul commercial airplanes, which are designed to carry passengers and cargo over long distances. The Boeing 747 is one of the most successful of these aircraft, with more than 1,500 delivered to airlines around the world. The airplane's design is not only flexible, but it is also reliable and efficient. The Boeing 747 is capable of carrying up to 800 passengers over distances of up to 8,000 miles, and it has a fuel consumption of about 2,500 gallons per hour.

In conclusion, the Boeing 747 is a remarkable example of how an airplane can be designed to accommodate growth. The airplane's design is not only flexible, but it is also reliable and efficient. The Boeing 747 is capable of carrying up to 800 passengers over distances of up to 8,000 miles, and it has a fuel consumption of about 2,500 gallons per hour. Albee Absurdity Adds Bit of Bite

The Phoenix Players' production of "Absurdity," by Edward Albee, adds a bit of bite to the usual fare. The play is a farce in a New York apartment, and is a study in the American middle-class, as well as an expose of the American system of education. The Phoenix Players' version, directed by John H. Duff, is well-paced and well-performed.

NEW YORK - June 12 -

Ludlow Hall was sitting in his study, looking through a stack of fan mail. It was a typical day, with the sunny summer weather outside. He was wearing his usual black suit and tie, and his hair was neatly combed. The letter he was holding was from a young fan who had written about how much his music meant to her.

"Dear Mr. Hall," the letter began. "I just wanted to say thank you for all the wonderful music you've given us. Your songs have meant so much to me over the years. I've grown up with your music, and it's always been a part of my life. Thank you for all you do." The letter went on to express how much the fan loved his music and how it had helped her through difficult times.

Ludlow smiled as he read the letter. "That's what music is all about," he thought. "It can touch people's lives and bring them happiness. That's why I do it." He took a deep breath and then returned to his work, ready to answer more letters from fans who loved his music.
