LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — The mounts for weeks on end have been that Oklahoma is the team to beat in college football, and last week’s game at Little Rock proved it. The Sooners, led by their legendary coach Bud Wilkinson, emerged victorious, 20-6.

On the field, it was a game of two halves. In the first, Oklahoma controlled the tempo, running against a Little Rock defense that was outmatched. The Sooners scored early, and never looked back.

The second half saw a change in tactics. Little Rock, realizing it was outmatched, switched to a more aggressive style, hoping to capitalize on Oklahoma’s mistakes. It worked for a while, as the Bears scored a touchdown late in the half, but Oklahoma’s defense held firm, and the Sooners closed out the game with a decisive victory.

With the win, Oklahoma improved to 5-0, and solidified its position as the team to beat in college football. But Coach Wilkinson knows that there is no time for complacency. "We need to keep working hard," he said. "Every week is a new challenge, and we can’t afford to take our eye off the ball."
