Ponderosa Ranch ‘Real’ To Viewers

With the historic turn of the century, film and a certain piece of property known as a ranch, the Ponderosa Ranch in Los Angeles, became a part of the world of motion pictures and television. The property was the setting for the long-running television series "Bonanza." The ranch, which was purchased by CBS in the 1960s, served as the backdrop for many episodes of the show. The ranch was later sold to a developer who planned to build a hotel and resort on the site. However, the developer never completed the project, and the ranch remained empty for years. In the 1980s, the ranch was purchased by a group of investors who restored the property to its former glory. Today, the Ponderosa Ranch is open to the public as a tourist attraction and film location. It is a great example of how a piece of property can become a part of American culture and history.

From Flops to FBI Hit

By JOAN CROSET

NEW YORK, N.Y.—It is to be assumed that The FBI can service William Reymond's. The newest member of the cast of the successful ABC TV series is a handsome, well-spoken young man who, through no fault of his, has had several flop television series.

His first was a dark World-produced series called Peter Oliver's Blues. It lasted 13 weeks. The Interests lasted 13 weeks. Ever since Peter Oliver's second series, The Criminal Man, lasted 13 weeks. "All of these together don't really make a 'hit,' " he said. "But this series, I hope, will be a hit."

He is pint-sized, but the roles covers up a massive idea.
