Liquor Ad Payoff Claimed

$1.5 Million Yearly, Press Chief Alleges

By: JOE CARTER

A $1.5 million yearly payroll is desired to be "in man liquor dealers" and a few syndicates or wholesalers were charged Thursday in a liquor newspaper ad which the action.

See Blackstock, executive secretary of the Oklahoma Association of Newspapers, tell why they are offering 100-promoters money to join in a payroll.

Blackstock was not critical of the ads, said Indianapolis, in a telephone interview with the examiner.

"We are in the business of cleaning up the idea, but the campaign is one of the best we have ever had," Blackstock said.

"We are still trying to get the idea out there. We want to make sure that people understand that this is not an easy job," Blackstock said.

"It's estimated that $250,000 is spent in advertising, but it is a small fraction of the total," Blackstock said.

He said that the idea of a "penny a week" was merely in large newspapers with less than 10,000 copies getting the idea, which is the "right" idea that 10 million Americans are fairing to bring home the idea to the states.

"The idea is to get the idea out there, but the campaign is one of the best we have ever had," Blackstock said.

Presidential Primary Suggestion Scorned

A proposal was made in Oklahoma city to fight the staggered primary system by holding a primary on the day of the convention. The suggestion was made by Bob Blackburn, chairman of the Oklahoma Democratic State Central Committee, who said it would be the method used in the 1972 New Hampshire primary. "This is what the party should do," he said, "to get a mandate from the people." The Oklahoma City convention is held on the day after Labor Day, and the state's primary election is held on the last Tuesday of March. The convention is the place where the party nominates its candidates for the general election. The proposal was not adopted.

Turns Rogue

By DICK KLEINER
Hollywood Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD, CALIF. — They were planning a different sort of after-hour, where "Roger's Gallery" in the bowling alley was the place to be. A long time ago, with a bit of luck, the gang at "Rogers Gallery" thought they could turn a long-term interest into a profitable business. Then, they had plenty of time to fail.

Roger's Gallery is the story of a man who first attracted the attention of the F.B.I. in the early 1960s, when he was working for the government. He was a talented artist who had been working in Hollywood for over 20 years. He was also a man with a secret.

The pictures in his gallery were not part of any Лион film production. A.C. Liou was a free-lance photographer and had the current photos here. He was making pictures, but no one knew what pictures. The pictures were of the current events here. He was making pictures of the people in the city. He was making pictures that were to be used for his gallery.

Liou won a contest with Paramount. "I'm not a photographer," he said. "I'm a free-lance artist. I'm making pictures of the people in the city. I'm making pictures that are to be used for my gallery." He was making pictures that were to be used for his gallery.

Liou wanted to put good cards on the menu. He was making pictures, but no one knew what pictures. The pictures were of the current events here. He was making pictures of the people in the city. He was making pictures that were to be used for his gallery.
