Negotiation Futility, Dean Acheson Says

NEW YORK (AP) - Dean Acheson, who was Secretary of State from 1949 to 1953, said today that the U.S. should not expect a peaceful solution to the dispute in Cyprus. "We've made progress," he said.

The United Nations Security Council last month appointed a committee to mediate the dispute. The committee has met several times, but so far there has been no progress.

The Greek government has repeatedly asked for a ceasefire, but the Turkish government has refused to agree.

The Greek and Turkish governments have been at odds for years over the island of Cyprus, which is divided into two areas - the Greek Cypriot area in the north and the Turkish Cypriot area in the south. The United Nations has been trying to mediate the dispute since 1964.

Cyprus: All Hands Off

The tension that on Cyprus has been created by Turks since the invasion of the Turkish Cypriots of April 1974.

The last retrenchment step is to commit the United Nations to the idea that the country should be turned into a nation with a recognized government that can exercise its sovereign rights. A cease-fire agreement to allow Greek Cypriot unity is the only way to proceed. The United States has decided that the best way to proceed is to support a cease-fire agreement.

Justice Via Juries

It's not that the jury system is wrong, but the way it is used. Too many present-day juries are not the kind that once made our country proud.

A good jury system is one where the decision is based on evidence and not on  preconceived notions. A jury should be selected because it is fair and impartial, not because it is a particular kind of person.

In the case of a school teacher who was accused of sexual misconduct, the jury system is not being used properly. The teacher was accused of molesting a student, but the evidence was not sufficient to prove the charges.

Phony Signs Of The Times

One cannot overlook the many signs of our times. The situation in the Middle East is a prime example. It is a time of change and uncertainty.

The United States has been trying to mediate the dispute between Israel and the Arab states, but so far, the efforts have been unsuccessful. The situation is tense and volatile, and it is difficult to predict what will happen next.

State Editors Say

The Message Is Clear

The state editors have said that the nation's leaders need to be clear about what they want to achieve in the Middle East. They need to be prepared to take action if necessary.
