Rights March Called For Capitol Hill

By DAVID CRAGHED
Washington, D.C. — City groups schedule protest in delay of passing housing ordinance.

A CAPITOL Hill Citizens of Concerns meeting was called yesterday afternoon to protest the passage of a housing ordinance in the District of Columbia, which the group feels will have a negative impact on the city's housing situation.

The group, which includes representatives from the National Association of Home Builders, the National Academy of Sciences, and the American Institute of Architects, met to discuss the proposed housing ordinance and to plan a protest to be held on Capitol Hill.

The protest is scheduled for this coming Sunday, and the group is calling on all citizens to attend and show their support for their cause.

In the meantime, the group continues to work on educating the public about the issues at stake and to advocate for a fair and just housing ordinance that will benefit all citizens of the District of Columbia.

Frustration that was pointed in a broad view of the nation's problems and in a wide range of business and industrial leaders has been replaced by a sense of optimism that the nation's problems will be solved and that the economy will be strengthened.

In many ways, the nation's problems are still very much with us. But the mood of the people is changing. They are becoming more optimistic about the future. They are more confident that the nation can solve its problems.

The people are beginning to see that there are solutions to the problems that beset the nation. They are beginning to believe that the nation can solve its problems.
