Ice Harbords Grip

Storm Worst In 10 Years

Emergency Salt Shipment Due

By PHILIP MORSE

"We're counting on an emergency shipment of salt to prevent a crisis," said a state official. "The roads are already starting to ice, and the temperatures are dropping."

The storm, which has been predicted for several days, is expected to bring heavy snow and freezing rain to the region. The state has activated its emergency response team and is working to ensure that supplies are on hand.

"The snow and ice are making travel difficult," said the state official. "We're asking people to stay indoors and avoid travel if possible."

Rogers To Ask Clarification On Right-To-Work Petition

The Oklahoma Supreme Court on Monday will hear arguments in a case that could determine whether Oklahoma's "right-to-work" law is constitutional. The case, involving a petition to place a constitutional amendment on the ballot for a vote in November, has raised questions about the law's impact on unions and workers.

The court will consider whether the ballot measure, which would prohibit compulsory contributions to unions, is properly referred to voters. A lower court had ruled the proposal unconstitutional, but the state attorney general's office appealed the decision.

The case, Oklahoma Federation of Teachers v. State, was brought by the state federation of teachers and other unions, who argue that the measure is a violation of their right to bargain collectively. The state attorney general's office argues that the proposal is a proper question for the voters to decide.

The court will also consider whether the measure is properly described on the ballot. The federation argues that the proposed amendment would effectively ban compulsory contributions to unions, while the state attorney general's office argues that the ballot language accurately reflects the measure's intent.

The outcome of the case could have significant implications for union organization and financial support in Oklahoma, and could set a precedent for other states with "right-to-work" laws.
