City Nearing Inside Track On Turnpike

Disaster Scene

At least eight persons were killed in Tucson, Ariz., when a jet fighter plane taking off from Davis Monthan Air Force Base crashed into the Colina Shopping Center.

Police found seven bodies on the street and floor of the building. Another body was found under the debris.

The victims were all men. All were killed instantly.

The plane was a General Dynamics F-106 Delta Dart. After takeoff, it crashed near the Colina Shopping Center.

Investigators are expected to continue their work today.

This is the first crash of a jet fighter plane in the United States.

The plane was carrying out a training mission.

The cause of the crash is under investigation.

General David Hourihan, fleet director of training for the Air Force, said the plane was a D-106 Delta Dart.

General Hourihan, who was in the crash area, said the pilot was killed instantly.

The plane was carrying three passengers. One was the pilot, a second was a member of the ground crew, and a third was a passenger.

Youth Revolting For 'Love'

"Dropping Out Means More Than Leaving School"

The news that two youth groups are planning to establish a new school in the town has caused a stir among the community. The groups, led by young people, are planning to create a school that will offer a different approach to education. The plan is to allow students to drop out of school without facing any penalties, and to focus on providing education that is relevant to the students' interests.

While many people are concerned about the impact of this decision, the youth groups believe that it is necessary to create a school that will cater to their needs. They argue that the current education system is outdated and does not meet the needs of today's students.

The plan has received mixed reactions from the community. Some people are supportive of the idea, while others are concerned about the potential consequences. The government is expected to take action if the plan goes ahead, but the youth groups are determined to see it through.
