Firemen's union demands a return to coal-shovel work rules.

It's featherbedding...

and would cost you plenty!

There's no need for a fireman on freight and yard crews. Not since the steam age. There's no coal for him to shovel, no idea for him to mine. With both engines and locomotives in the cab of a road locomotive, there are no boilermakers for a third man to perform. A fireman would no more perform these duties than an insurance salesman would prepare a line of firewood.

There are some who say it's featherbedding. They encroach on road crews, they encroach on road crews, they encroach on road crews. They encroach on road crews, they encroach on road crews.

And railroadmen get a green light to eliminate the unnecessary excess jobs on freight and yard crews. Yes, but we need protection. We need protection to get adequate revenue. We need protection to get adequate revenue. We need protection to get adequate revenue. We need protection to get adequate revenue.

'Canterbury' Play Bawdy But Honest

A new off-broadway show, "Canterbury," written by Don Taylor and directed by George Roy Hill, opened in New York City last week.

The play is an adaptation of the classic Geoffrey Chaucer romance, "The Canterbury Tales," and features a cast of eight characters who tell their stories as they travel on a pilgrimage to Canterbury Cathedral.

The story opens with the Prologue, where Chaucer introduces the pilgrims and explains the purpose of their journey.

In the second scene, the pilgrims arrive at a tavern where they are greeted by a group of nineeccentors. The hosts of the tavern, a group of seven noblemen and two monks, are met with hostility by the pilgrims.

The play continues with the pilgrims telling their tales, which range from humorous to serious, and from the light-hearted to the erotic.

The inmates, John Brown and James Johnson, escaped from the Oklahoma State Penitentiary last week.

Both Brown and Johnson are serving sentences for armed robbery and are considered dangerous and likely to re-offend.

Lombardi Requests Release From Packers

DENVER, COLO. (AP) - Bart Starr and Lombardi have agreed to a settlement that will end the lawsuit brought by the former quarterback and coach. Lombardi's attorney, David Brodsky, said he and the former Packers coach had reached an agreement that would settle the lawsuit filed by Lombardi against the team in December.

The lawsuit was filed by Lombardi, who was seeking compensation for injuries he sustained during his career. Lombardi's attorney, David Brodsky, said the agreement would provide compensation for Lombardi's injuries.

Brodsky said that Lombardi would also receive a job with the team.

"We believe that this agreement is fair and reasonable," said Brodsky. "We are pleased that we have been able to come to an agreement that will provide compensation for Lombardi's injuries and give him a job with the team."
