Oklahoma’s Baptists Oppose Sex Education

SIECUS Materials Labeled Pornographic

By RALPH ELLIOTT

The Southern Baptists of Oklahoma County, Monday, announced their opposition to the use of SIECUS materials in public schools.

According to the Baptist position, the SIECUS materials, which are labeled by the organization as "educational," contain sexual education materials that are not suitable for public school use. The Baptists claimed that the materials contain explicit sexual content and are not appropriate for use in public schools.

Education officials in Oklahoma County said that the Baptist announcement was a "shock" to them. "We have been working closely with the Baptist church to implement a comprehensive sex education program in our schools," said one official. "We were surprised by their sudden decision to oppose the SIECUS materials." The Baptist officials stated that they would continue to work with the education officials to find an alternative curriculum that is suitable for public school use.

The announcement has sparked a debate among Oklahoma Baptists and education officials. Some Baptists support the Baptist position, while others believe that the SIECUS materials are necessary for comprehensive sex education. Education officials have called for a "dialogue" with the Baptist church to find a solution that satisfies both sides.

The Oklahoma Baptist Convention, which oversees the state’s Baptist churches, has not publicly responded to the Baptist announcement. However, the convention’s education officials have indicated that they will continue to work with the Baptist church to find an alternative curriculum that is suitable for public school use.
