Big Ride Is Taking Long Trip

Oklahoma's largest roller coaster is moving Monday (April 27) from its present location at the Mohawk Mountain, a Pullman-type rail car, to its new location in a rail yard near the city's comprehensive transit system.

The roller coaster, which opened in 1967, was designed and built by the Conrail Corporation. It features a single car that can accommodate up to 20 riders and has a top speed of 40 miles per hour. The ride is 700 feet long and includes several drops and twists.

The new location will allow the roller coaster to be more easily accessed by the public and will provide an increased capacity for rides. The ride is expected to be open for business by the end of the season.

Legal Knots In Student Revolts

A large body of what bankers call ten-/-off is being written in the wake of the last several days, and a great deal of that writing is going on in some demonstrations which are not being reported in the newspapers. The situation is not quite the same as the situation in 1962, and there are some differences among the groups being reported.

One of the most recent is that of the student protests against the suspension of Robert F. Kennedy, and in this protest there were students who were suspended at the University of California at Berkeley, where a protest was held over the suspension of a professor.

The protest involved the suspension of a professor who had been suspended for teaching a course on the history of the American Revolution. The professor was suspended because he had taught a course on the history of the American Revolution, and the students felt that he was teaching a course on the history of the American Revolution.

A group of students who were suspension-resistant black students from the University of California at Berkeley, held a protest over the suspension of a professor who had been suspended for teaching a course on the history of the American Revolution.

The students felt that the professor was being suspended because he had taught a course on the history of the American Revolution, and the students felt that he was being suspended because he had taught a course on the history of the American Revolution.

State Editors Say

Negro Proposals Self-Defeating

While the Negro proposal for a 12-step plan are used as the basis for a new and better society in the United States, the editors of the two major Negro newspapers in the country, the Chicago Defender and the New York Amsterdam News, say that the proposals are self-defeating.

The Chicago Defender editor, Charles S. Johnson, said that the proposals are self-defeating because they are based on the idea that the Negro is a minority in the United States, and that the Negro should try to change the United States, not become a part of it.

The New York Amsterdam News editor, John H. Johnson, said that the proposals are self-defeating because they are based on the idea that the Negro is a minority in the United States, and that the Negro should try to change the United States, not become a part of it.

Conflict-Of-Interest Bills Pass In House

Conflict-of-interest bills were passed in the House of Representatives on Wednesday, June 16, 1964, and are now before the Senate for consideration.

The bills were introduced by Rep. John F. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Rep. Robert F. Kennedy, D-Calif., and are designed to prevent members of Congress from becoming involved in conflicts of interest.

The bills would require members of Congress to disclose any financial interests they have in businesses, corporations, or other entities that they may be involved in.

The bills would also require members of Congress to recuse themselves from any votes on legislation that would affect their financial interests.

The bills are the result of a series of investigations by the House Ethics Committee, which found that members of Congress were not always recusing themselves from votes on legislation that would affect their financial interests.
