Nixon Winning ABM Support

WASHINGTON (C) -- President Nixon's three-day swing into Virginia on Wednesday is a capper on a tour that has taken the administration's message directly to the people. The president, who was in Virginia on Tuesday, is traveling to Virginia on Wednesday and Thursday to meet with military officers and discuss the ABM defense system. The tour is part of a larger effort by the administration to build support for the ABM system. The tour is also intended to build support for the president's efforts to terminate the Vietnam War. The tour is also intended to build support for the president's efforts to terminate the Vietnam War.

The People's Voice

Washington: For a year now, A.J. Canfield has been trying to sell a concept to the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church of Christ. Canfield, a 35-year-old New York lawyer, is trying to get the state legislature to pass a bill that would allow the church to own land and property.

Canfield's plan is based on the idea that the church should own property in order to maintain its independence from the state. He has been working with a group of lawyers and religion scholars to develop a legal framework for the proposed bill.

Canfield said he is encouraged by the response he has received so far. "I think we have a good chance of getting this bill passed," he said. "But it will be a long road, and we will need the support of the public and the politicians."
