VACATION CAMPING & TRAVEL GUIDE
Plastic Worm Really Bugs Hungry Fish

"A great find for every fisherman," says Bob Robey, owner of Robey's Tackle and Bait Shop in Oklahoma City, OK.

The worm offers an effective lure for bass, catfish, and walleye. According to Robey, it is made from real fish and is odorless, making it irresistible to fish. It is available in different sizes and colors, allowing for customization based on the specific fish species.

Robey advises anglers to use the plastic worm in combination with natural baits such as live baits or natural fish. This combination increases the chances of catching fish and provides a more realistic presentation to the fish.

The plastic worm is easy to use and can be casted from a bobber or fished deep, depending on the fishing conditions. Robey recommends experimenting with different techniques to find the best approach for each situation.

Overall, the plastic worm by Bob Robey's Tackle and Bait Shop is a valuable addition to any angler's tackle box, offering a reliable and effective way to catch fish when natural baits might not work.

Buffalo Hunting—With Camera

Photography with wild life as a background or hobby can be most rewarding. It can take much patience and time before the desired shot is obtained. Seems every time I go out to get a shot of a wild buffalo, they all either run off to get away from me, or they get bored of me and stand still for a few minutes before walking off.

Photography in the wild is not the kind of photography that we get in the studio. Many times the wildlife photographer has to wait hours or days for the perfect shot. When the weather is not cooperating, it can be even more difficult. But the wait is worth it when you finally get that shot you've been waiting for.

In conclusion, photography with wild life as a background or hobby can be most rewarding. It takes time and patience, but the results are well worth it. So if you're interested in trying your hand at this type of photography, be prepared to wait and see what the wildlife has in store for you.

Skin Diving, Flying Don't Go Together!

On the surface, one might not have been aware of the connection between skin diving and flying. However, there are instances where these two activities do intersect, and understanding that can prevent certain mishaps.

Skin diving, or SCUBA diving, is a popular water sport that involves breathing underwater with the aid of a self-contained underwater breathing apparatus (SCUBA). Flying, on the other hand, involves the operation of aircraft to traverse the air. Both activities require training, skills, and knowledge for safe execution.

However, there are certain precautions that need to be taken when engaging in these two activities simultaneously. One must ensure that the equipment used for skin diving is compatible with the flight environment and that the diver is trained in both disciplines.

This intersection of activities highlights the importance of cross-disciplinary knowledge and training. It also underscores the need for stringent safety protocols to prevent accidents.

In conclusion, while skin diving and flying are two separate activities, understanding their interrelation is crucial for ensuring safety. Both divers and pilots should be aware of the potential risks and take necessary precautions to avoid any mishaps.

No News Good To Transplanted Elk

How are the transplanted elk doing? It has been almost a year since the Oklahoma Department of Wildlife Conservation released 150 elk on 20,000 acres of private land in the northwestern part of the state. The elk have been doing well, according to the Department.

A couple of months ago, the Department received a report from a landowner who had observed the elk herd. The landowner said the elk seemed to be thriving and that the herd was expanding.

The Department has been monitoring the elk population since the release. They have been collecting data on the elk's movements, behavior, and health. The data has been used to help determine the success of the translocation.

So far, the transplanted elk are doing well. The Department continues to monitor the herd and will continue to do so for the foreseeable future.
