Army Testing Germ Warfare, Pearson Charges

By Dave Pearson and Jack Anderson

"It's been custom to believe for some time that the germ warfare is now testing at the base near Lake City," reported a military source.

The source, who was in charge of the current testing, said the experiments were taking place near a small town called Dark Wind. The town was chosen because of its isolated location and the presence of large open fields.

The experiments involve the use of specially designed equipment to test the effectiveness of new germ warfare agents. The source said that the experiments are being conducted in a controlled environment to ensure the safety of the participants.

"These experiments are crucial to our military strategy," the source said. "We need to be prepared for any scenario that may arise."
