I Didn't Think He'd Choke

By DOROTHY MAY

C. D. Howard had been waiting for his chance to peak his son, C. L. Howard, Jr., at the Oklahoma high school basketball tournament at Oklahoma City. He had been looking forward to the tournament for months.

"I figured he'd have the best team of the tournament," Howard said. "But I always thought he'd be the one to watch out for. C. L. has been working hard all year." Howard had been a college basketball star at the University of Oklahoma and had been a successful coach at the high school level.

The tournament was held at the Municipal Auditorium in Oklahoma City, and C. L. Howard Jr. led his team to victory, earning his father's respect.

"I didn't think he'd choke," Howard said. "But I was proud of him. He worked hard and it paid off." Howard had been a proud father throughout the tournament, watching his son's every move and cheering him on.

"I'm proud of him," Howard said. "He's a great kid and a great basketball player. I'll always be proud of him." Howard had been a successful coach and a successful father, and he had every reason to be proud of his son.

"I didn't think he'd choke," Howard said. "But I'm glad he didn't." Howard had been a proud father throughout the tournament, watching his son's every move and cheering him on.
