Well, you can't win 'em all.
Governor Deweybar, speaking at a luncheon recently for General Electric's new plant here, Thursday, August 15, 1940, the state's political climate and the orator's political future were both discussed.

He told what some of his recent remarks on the question of a mental institution in the area south of the city, particularly near South Oklahoma Avenue, might suggest. Governor Ben Carnas, Jr., who is expected to be present later in the program, was turned down by the governor.

"I don't think," said the governor, "that you can win 'em all, but I can win some, and I think I've won some in this case."

Embryo's Sex Told At 14 Weeks

WASHINGTON (AP) - Using a new technique, researchers at the National Institutes of Health have for the first time successfully predicted the sex of an embryo at 14 weeks of gestation.

The technique, known as "karyotyping," involves the analysis of the chromosomes of the embryo. The researchers were able to predict the sex of the embryo with a high degree of accuracy.

"The results are very exciting," said one researcher. "This could revolutionize the way we think about prenatal diagnosis."
