Sanitation Strike Effort 'At Crossroads'

By PAUL CARLIDGE

In the city of New Orleans, sanitation strikers and black leaders called a rally on Monday night in efforts to obtain more support for the strike, which has been ongoing for six days.

Black leaders of the United Auto Workers and the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees were also on hand.

The rally was held at the New Orleans Coliseum, where more than 2,000 workers and supporters gathered.

The strikers are seeking better pay and working conditions, including a $15-an-hour minimum wage and a 40-hour workweek.

State Getting Cold Shoulder

In a letter to the editor, a New Orleans resident expressed concern about the state's cold shoulder to the city.

The resident wrote, "The state of Louisiana has been neglecting New Orleans for too long. The city needs help, and it's time the state recognized that fact."
