Colonel Saw Massacre: Action, Witnesses Say

Colonel John P. Magruder, the American soldier in Vietnam, said in an interview that he witnessed a massacre of civilians by South Vietnamese forces. He said he had seen the bodies of hundreds of people, including women and children, lying on the ground. Magruder said he had been ordered to leave the area after witnessing the violence. The incident was one of several that have sparked international condemnation of the American military in Vietnam. Magruder himself was later court-martialed and convicted of dereliction of duty.

Car Insurance Costs Studied By Senators

WASHINGTON - A new study of auto insurance rates for the nation's 50 largest cities has found that the cost of coverage varies widely among states and from one city to another within the same state.

The study, conducted by the Insurance Information Institute, found that premiums for a basic policy can range from $500 to $3,000 per year for the same coverage. The study also found that the average rate for a basic policy in the 50 largest metropolitan areas is $1,300 per year.

The study was based on data from 10 insurance companies in each of the 50 largest cities. The companies were asked to provide rates for a single 30-year-old male driver with a good driving record and no accidents in the past three years. The rates were then averaged for each city.

The findings of the study are significant because they show that the cost of car insurance is not only a function of the driver's age and driving record but also of where he or she lives.

"The cost of car insurance is a major expense for many families," said Robert Hartwig, vice president of the Insurance Information Institute. "Our study shows that the cost of coverage varies widely from one city to another, even within the same state. This is particularly true for residents of urban areas where the cost of living is high and the risk of accidents is greater."

The study also found that the cost of car insurance is higher in states with a no-fault insurance system. In these states, drivers are required to purchase a minimum level of coverage regardless of whether they are at fault in an accident.

GOP Survey Reports Majority Backs Spiro

Ignored Deadly Shelling

Pitching the Democratic candidate as a man of peace, Spiro Agnew, vice president of the United States, has been on the defensive ever since the North Vietnamese launched their offensive through Cambodia last week.

The situation was tense in Cambodia as North Vietnamese forces pushed ahead, attempting to capture the capital, Phnom Penh. Agnew was quoted as saying, "I have no control over the actions of our allies." This statement has caused some to question his leadership abilities.

Virtually all U.S. allies in the area support Agnew's position, stating that they have no control over the actions of their own forces. The situation is particularly tense in Laos, where the United States has a major military presence.

Aid for Allies

Despite the threats, the United States continues to aid its allies. This week, the U.S. announced it will provide $500 million in aid to Laos, and another $1 billion to South Vietnam.

However, despite these efforts, the situation remains tense. The North Vietnamese advance has caused considerable concern among U.S. officials, who fear it could lead to a full-scale war.

In other news, the U.S. has recently signed a friendship treaty with India, which could have implications for future military aid to the country.
