Hunters Capture Bearded Holdout
Japanese Soldier Surrenders After 28-Years

AGANA, GUAM—A Japanese soldier who had eluded allied forces in the islands for 28 years and was the last survivor of the Japanese garrison that deserted in World War II.

Felipe Estrella, a local hunter, said he saw and shot the bearded man during his pursuit of deer near a forest on the island of Guam, 20 miles south of Okinawa. Police and Guam National Guard soldiers who were searching the island for the man were not aware of Estrella’s discovery.

Japanese officials in Tokyo said the soldier is the last survivor of the 90 soldiers who deserted the island in World War II. The others were thought to have been killed or captured by local guerillas. The soldier refused to surrender.

Estrella, a native of Guam, said he had searched the island for many years as part of his career as a hunter.

Guam’s governor said the soldier could be a valuable source of information for military historians.

Villagers in the island’s capital, Agana, celebrated the capture of the soldier.

FTC Sues Cereal Sales Monopolistic

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commission today charged General Foods Corp. with practicing a "foot-in-the-door" maneuver, in which consumers are lured into buying one product and then persuaded to buy another.

The FTC said the practice infringes on the consumer’s legal right to refuse to buy.

The PEOPLE’S Voice

Guns Vs. Lipstick

It has been calculated that the world demand for arms is approximately equal to the need for food. However, this does not mean that all nations have the same level of production. In fact, some countries may produce more than they need, while others import to meet their needs.

Bob Considine

Death Sentence Being Waived

Here is a recent example from Mexico, a country that produces about 1% of the world’s arms and has a high rate of crime. In the case of the Mexican government, they are trying to reduce the number of people in prison. They are trying to reduce overcrowding and improve conditions. It is no surprise that our country is trying to reduce overcrowding and improve conditions.

Roads Issue
Put To People

Some states have tried to solve the problem of overcrowding by building new roads. For example, Virginia is building a new road to accommodate the traffic. However, this solution does not address the root cause of the problem, which is overpopulation.

Tom Braden

Busing—Liberal Dilemma

Busing is a controversial issue in the United States. It is used to achieve racial balance in schools. However, it is not a solution to the problem of overcrowding.
