France's Drug Traffic

The French import of heroin that is sold in the free world is a matter of concern. It would be a mistake to lump all business transactions into the same category. There are many legitimate businesses that are involved in drug trafficking.

April 2, 1978, 8:00 a.m. at the south gate of the city. A man with a gun and a hat entered the gate and walked over to the guard. He handed the guard a note and asked for the key to the north gate. The guard opened the gate and let the man through. Then, the guard closed the gate and locked it.

New York Congressman Frank E. Ross, a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, said that the situation is urgent for the American people. The drug problem is a national problem, and it needs national action. The government has a responsibility to control the flow of heroin and other drugs.

The United States and France have a joint agreement to fight drug trafficking. The agreement was signed in Paris in 1977. The agreement is called the "Paris Agreement on the Suppression of Drug Trafficking." The agreement is a step in the right direction.
