BELLMON HITS BUS BAN
Proposed Amendment Called Meaningless

WASHINGTON (AP)—A constituent amendment covering buses of school children to the Supreme Court, the House Democrats, led by Speaker Sam Rayburn, has been defeated by the House. The amendment, which would require buses to be segregated, was opposed by the Democratic leadership.

The court, in a unanimous ruling, upheld the Supreme Court's decision in the case of Brown v. Board of Education.

The decision is a blow to the Democrats' efforts to bring about desegregation of schools in the South. The court's ruling means the schools will remain segregated for at least another year.

The amendment was introduced by Rep. James Oberstar, D-Minn., and was supported by the House Democrats. It would have required the Secretary of Education to issue regulations to the states to ensure that no school district could operate a bus system that would result in segregation.

The court ruled that the amendment was not necessary, as it was already covered by the Supreme Court's decision.

The decision was widely praised by civil rights leaders, who said it was a step forward in the fight for desegregation.

The House Democratic leadership has been under pressure to take action on segregation issues, but thecourt's ruling may give them an opportunity to retreat without appearing to be weakening their position.
