U.S. Prisons Must Change

This is 17th in a series on American prisons.

By R. W. RAGHAN

For abductions who want to be sentenced or prison officials who do not. It is time to wake up to the fact that no one is beyond the reach of the law. For a long time, we have been told that prison reform is impossible. However, the reality is that we cannot afford to continue ignoring the problem. The cost of incarcerating people is soaring, and the system is broken. It is time to take action.

Prison reform is not just about what happens inside the walls. It is about their families, their communities, and the impact on society as a whole. The current system is failing our communities, and we must take steps to fix it. This includes addressing the root causes of crime and making sure that everyone has access to resources to help them build a better future.

We need to work together to create a system that is more just and fair. It is time to start making changes that will make a difference.
