Electronic tokens can be read by microprocessors to indicate the presence of a valid ticket. This technology is being used to replace paper tickets in many public transportation systems across the United States. It allows for faster and more efficient ticketing processes, reducing the need for cash transactions and improving overall service. Kansas and California require this technology in public transit systems in order to comply with federal transportation standards.

Oklahoma has a long history of political figures, from James Long to Clinton, who have run for the White House.

BARTLETT BOND PLAN

TULSA -- Gov. Dewey Ball's proposed bond program would finance a $50 million expansion of the state's public high schools and an $80 million expansion of the state's public universities. The plan would also fund an $80 million expansion of the state's public libraries.

The plan would be financed through a bond issue of up to $500 million. The bond issue would be sold to investors, and the state would then use the proceeds to finance the expansion projects.

The plan would be opposed by some educators, who argue that the state should use its existing funds to improve the state's public schools.
