Eye On The Garden

Care Controls Lawn Weeds

By GUST N. BLAYER

Although it is too late for controlling gross lawn weeds in the present year, many homeowners are already investigating how to check weed growth next season. A weed-control program, similar to the one used for the lawn, is a good idea. A gardener who has neglected the lawn this year will find there is a lot of work to be done next season. The gardener who has neglected the lawn will find there is a lot of work to be done next season. The gardener should not wait until the weeds are a problem to control them. A weed-control program should be started now, while the weeds are still small and before they become a problem.

Road Use Increases

Mileage Death Toll Down

Oklahoma City, Oklahoma Journal

In Oklahoma City, the number of miles driven by motorists has increased, but the number of miles driven has decreased as well. The result is a lower death toll. The city's traffic safety department has implemented several measures to improve traffic safety, including the installation of more traffic lights, the addition of speed humps, and increased police enforcement. These efforts have helped to reduce the number of accidents and fatalities on the city's roads. The department continues to monitor traffic patterns and make necessary adjustments to ensure the safety of all motorists.

Teacher Eyes Human Nutrition Goal

I have an idea as to how we might improve the nutrition of children in the United States. I believe we should institute a program of mandatory competitive food education in schools.

There are many children who come to school hungry, and I feel that if we could teach them how to make healthy choices, they would be more likely to make those choices when they are older.

Food Study May Help Many Mothers

A study at the University of California, Berkeley has shown that mothers who eat a healthy diet during pregnancy have children who are less likely to develop heart disease.

This is important because heart disease is one of the leading causes of death in the United States. By improving the diet of mothers during pregnancy, we can help reduce the risk of heart disease in our children.

How 5 million families avoid the dull potato routine.

There are many ways to make potatoes more interesting. One idea is to try different seasoning and cooking methods. For example, you could try roasting potatoes with garlic and paprika, or boiling them in a mixture of butter and herbs.

Care Controls Lawn Weeds

By WARD THOMAS

In the warm, humid weather of spring, weeding and lawn care become less frequent activities, yet a neglected yard can often lead to problems later in the season. One such problem is the overgrowth of weeds, which can deprive your lawn of necessary nutrients and water. But there are several methods you can use to control weeds in your lawn without resorting to harsh chemicals.

Lawn Thatch Kills Growth

by SALLY McDOUGAL

Thatch is a natural layer of organic material that forms on the soil surface of lawns. It is composed of dead grass and plant debris that have not decomposed. Thatch can be beneficial as it helps retain moisture and protect the soil from the sun's heat, but it can also be a problem if it becomes too thick. Thatch can smother the soil, preventing the growth of new grass and can also provide a habitat for pests such as grubs.

From Hoof To Table

Only about 39 percent, or 246 pounds of a 465-pound beef animal, at the feedlot level, find its way to the kitchen table, according to this study by Dr. George A. Wais, associate professor of animal science at Oklahoma State University. The feed-lot “scrap” includes 60 pounds of hide, 200 pounds of other waste, 108 pounds of fat and 60 pounds of bone.

Food Study May Help Many Mothers

A 4-year related degree in nutrition is essential for Mrs. Carol R. Rand, professor of food science at Oklahoma State University. It may save some money and make it easier to feed more nutritious meals to members of preschool children in one-income families.

Randol in the study will peak into the habits of 113 mothers with preschool children, in three southeastern states and Texas, until the spring of 1973.

For her study, Miss Rand prepared a 12-month observation chart and followed the following criteria: income, health, weight and eye health of the mother; height, weight and bone density of the child; and the amount of milk and other foods the mother and child ate.

Each participant completed a degree in child care and programming and received a behavior analysis.

Miss Rand said results of the investigation made it clear that skilled nutritionists could improve meals for a child's growth by cutting food costs and increasing nutrition.
