1977 JUNE 23
Washingt0n, D.C.—With 213 employees, the United States Patent and Trademark Office is the largest government agency in the nation. The agency processes and issues patents and trademarks for inventions and designs, providing protection for inventors and industries alike.

The Patent and Trademark Office has a unique system of assigning numbers to each application, making it possible to identify specific patents and trademarks. This system is known as the Classification System of the Patent and Trademark Office (CSPTO).

The CSPTO is divided into 8 broad groups, each containing 44 subgroups. Each subgroup is divided into 11 subcategories, and each subcategory is divided into 14 sub-subcategories. This system allows for precise classification of inventions and designs.

One of the most significant aspects of the CSPTO is the publication of the Patent and Trademark Office Manual (PTOM), which contains the official rules and regulations governing the issuance of patents and trademarks. The PTOM is updated regularly to reflect changes in the law and to provide guidance to examiners and applicants.

The Patent and Trademark Office is committed to providing high-quality service to inventors and industries across the nation. By issuing patents and trademarks, the agency helps to foster innovation and economic growth, which is essential to the success of the U.S. economy.
