Hall Says Eagleton to Help In State

By HOWARD ENGLISH
in the White House

HEIDELBERG, Sept. 9—President Nixon told The Washington Post that John F. Kennedy would not be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for president in 1968.

Nixon said that Kennedy was a serious contender for the nomination and that he would not rule him out as a possibility.

The President's statement came in response to a question from a reporter about whether Kennedy would run in 1968.

Nixon said that Kennedy's campaign would not be affected by the controversy surrounding the nomination process.

He added that he had spoken to Kennedy the previous day and that they had discussed the situation in detail.

Nixon also said that he believed Kennedy would be a strong candidate in 1968 and that he would have an opportunity to win.

When asked if he thought Kennedy would run, Nixon replied: "I don't know. But if he decides not to run, I think he will support the party and help us win.

"I think that Kennedy is a very tough campaigner and a very strong leader. He is a man who can win in 1968."

Nixon said that he had spoken to Kennedy about the nomination process and that they had agreed on the importance of unity in the party.

He added that he had discussed the situation with other Democratic leaders and that they had reached a consensus on the matter.

When asked if he thought the nomination process would be fair, Nixon replied: "I think so. I think that the Democratic party is strong enough to handle the nomination process and that we will have a fair and open process.

"I think that the party is strong enough to handle the nomination process and that we will have a fair and open process."

Nielsen's "Gang is all White" - Dr. John Phibes is having a bit of a problem. A rival music station has announced it will be selling its radio station, and the owner has invited Nixon to hear the bids. Dr. Phibes is quite nervous. He asks the managers of his music station to come and listen to the bids. The managers accept his offer and arrive at the station. As they enter, Dr. Phibes greets them and tells them that he has a great idea for the station. The managers look at him skeptically. Dr. Phibes continues, "Why don't we change the name of the station to 'The Music of the Future' and focus on modern music?" The managers are impressed by this idea. Dr. Phibes continues, "And we can make a lot of money by advertising to young people." The managers are convinced and agree to implement his plan. Dr. Phibes is ecstatic. He thanks the managers and leaves the station, feeling confident that his plan will work.

Oklahoma Journal Classified

OMAHA, Neb. — Omaha Police had some success in their search for a possible murder suspect Monday, but they were still stymied in their efforts to solve the slaying of an Ada, Okla., woman who was found dead in a rural area near her home.

The woman, identified as Ada Pinkston, was found dead on Sunday in her home in the rural area near Ada. The cause of death was not immediately known, but police said they believed she was murdered.

Police said they were searching for a possible suspect who had left the area at the time of the slaying.

The search continued Monday, but police said they had not yet made any progress in the investigation.

A man who had been seen in the area the previous day was also being interviewed by investigators.

Police said they were not yet able to confirm the identity of the suspect, but they said they were confident they would be able to make an arrest soon.

Meanwhile, the family of Ada Pinkston said they were devastated by the loss of their loved one.

"We’re just heartbroken," one family member said. "She was such a wonderful person, and we just can’t believe she’s gone so young."

Ada Pinkston was 32 years old and had been living in the rural area for about a decade.

The family said they hoped the community would come together to support them during this difficult time.

"She was such a kind and caring person, and we just don’t know what to do without her," another family member said. "We’re just trying to figure out how to get through this.

The family thanked the police for their efforts and asked for continued prayers and support from the community.

"We just want to say thank you for all your help and support," one family member said. "We know we’ll get through this and find the truth about what happened to her."
