Feds Ousting State Agency

It might look like a scene on the capital hill in 80 days when the Board of Property and Casualty Insurance issues its final decision on a high-profile tax dodge involving the state agency that was in charge of Oct 9, 1973.

The state agency, headed by Edward Seales, the Oklahoma City tax collector, was deducted state income taxes. The Oklahoma Supreme Court ruled that the state agency had the authority to deduct state income taxes without the consent of the Board of Property and Casualty Insurance. The state agency was ordered to pay the taxes on Oct 9, 1973.

Nixon Blasts Dike Claims

NIK NIXON (R) - President Nixon accused the U.S. Secretary of Transportation, John Volcker, of sabotage. "Volcker has been pulling the strings of my administration's transportation policies," Nixon said.

Nixon's statement was in response to Volcker's recent allegations that Nixon had been involved in a conspiracy to illegally divert funds from the federal highway program.

The White House denied the charges, saying Nixon had been "flagrantly violated in his right to consult with his top aides on all matters of national importance." Nixon later backed down and admitted that he had consulted with Volcker.

On Bonanza Shutoff

JOE B. HUNT

The Oklahoma City Board of Water Commissioners voted unanimously to shut off water service to the Bonanza area, which had been served by a small water company that was unable to meet its obligations.

The move was made after the company, which had been supplying water to the Bonanza area for several years, declared bankruptcy and was unable to continue operations.

EAGLETON STAYS, WAPPS ANGEL

Charges Labeled 'Lie'

Senator Eagleton, who had been under fire for his health problems, was cleared of any wrongdoing in the matter.

Eagleton's accusers had alleged that he had been involved in a scheme to bribe doctors to prescribe tranquilizers for him. The charges were later found to be baseless.

The case received widespread media attention and became a symbol of the Senate's reluctance to address the issue of mental illness.

Furor Brews Over Auction Fees

BY PAUL EAGLE

W.A. True and N.H. "Four" Winberg, two of the most popular auctioneers in the state, have been outspoken in their opposition to the new fees imposed by the state.

Winberg, who runs the largest auction company in the state, said the fees were unreasonable and would drive business away from Oklahoma.

The two auctioneers have been at odds with the state for months over the issue. Winberg believes the fees are too high and不合理, while True feels they are necessary to fund the state's auction services.

The issue has become a major political controversy in the state, with both sides accusing the other of being greedy.

FTC Victim Of Ambivalence?

It is understandable if the Federal Trade Commission is feeling some ambivalence about its efforts to regulate advertising. The agency is facing a dilemma, as it tries to balance the need for consumer protection against the risk of stifling innovation and competition.

The FTC has been a key player in regulating advertising practices, seeking to prevent deceptive and unfair practices. However, in recent years, the agency has been criticized for its aggressive enforcement tactics and for overreaching in certain cases.

The latest controversy involves a recent decision to challenge a marketing claim made by a major company. This decision has raised questions about the FTC's approach to regulation and whether it is striking the right balance between protection and restraint.

The challenge facing the FTC is complex, and it is likely that the agency will continue to face criticism and scrutiny in the coming years. It will be important for the FTC to carefully consider its actions and to ensure that it is not overstepping its bounds or creating unnecessary obstacles for businesses and consumers alike.

Annex Israel?

There is a debate about the annexation of Israeli territories. Some argue that it would be a positive move towards peace, while others believe it would strengthen Israeli control and lead to further conflicts.

This is a complex issue that involves political, legal, and ethical considerations. It is important for the international community to engage in dialogue and work towards a peaceful resolution.

Nixon's Choice Of Agnew

President Nixon has nominated Spiro Agnew as his vice president. This move has been controversial, with some critics questioning Agnew's qualifications and integrity.

The decision to choose Agnew as vice president has raised questions about the direction of American politics. It will be interesting to see how the new administration operates and what changes, if any, are made to domestic and foreign policies.
