New Opportunities Opened Up

Armed Services Battle For Women Recruits

By JIM LEEHAN

The battle for women is a key issue as the United States prepares for a possible new war. The armed services are looking for qualified women who are prepared to serve in any capacity. The battle is taking place at different locations around the country and is expected to last for several months. Many women are considering joining the military, but they need to be aware of the opportunities available and the requirements for enlistment.

WASHINGTON - Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield today denounced the decision by the armed forces to discharge two female service members for alleged sexual misconduct. The women were part of a group of four that Mansfield had previously criticized for their behavior.

Mansfield said the decision was "an indication that the military is losing its grip on the problem." He added that the armed forces should be doing more to prevent such incidents from occurring in the future.

Revenue Sharing Outlined At Conference

States Promised No Strings On Aid

Revenue sharing has become a major issue in recent years. Many states have expressed concerns about the strings attached to federal funding, which can limit their autonomy and control over local decision-making. However, the conference was organized to outline the possibilities and benefits of revenue sharing programs. The conference was attended by representatives from various states, including some who have been critical of the program.

Oilmens Criticize McGovern Stand On Imports

There is significant opposition to the McGovern-Dole Act, which places limitations on the amount of imports that can enter the United States. Some oilmen argue that this will hurt their business and could lead to shortages in the long run. However, the act was designed to support local economies in developing countries, which is a laudable goal. It remains to be seen how successful this approach will be in the long run.

New Opportunities Opened Up Armed Services Battle For Women Recruits

By JIM ATKINSON

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State William Rogers Friday ordered an unprecedented government-wide publicity push for the armed forces, saying that the new administration is "open for business." Sources said there is a strong possibility that the Defense Department will seek to increase recruiting efforts.

Rogers said he was "shocked" by the results of a survey conducted by the Survey Research Center at the University of Michigan, which indicated that only half of the eligible population was aware of the opportunities available in the military.

"I am concerned," Rogers said, "that we are not reaching as many potential recruits as we could be. We need to do more to inform the public about the benefits of military service."

In response to Rogers' announcement, the Department of Defense released a statement saying that it would increase its advertising budget by 20 percent and would initiate a new program to provide financial incentives to potential recruits.

Oklahoma City, Okla. — The Defense Department has announced a significant increase in the number of women being recruited into the armed forces. The move is part of a broader effort to address the long-standing gender imbalance in the military.

The increase was prompted by the recent announcement of new opportunities for women in the armed forces, including the possibility of serving in combat roles.

"We are excited about the prospects for women in the military," said Secretary of Defense Mark Esper. "We believe that allowing women to serve in all roles will not only strengthen the military, but will also promote gender equality and diversity."

Channel 25 Offers Viewers Another Nighttime TV Choice

In the 25th anniversary season of Channel 25, the station's programming lineup will be expanded to include more local and national content. The new lineup will feature additional news and talk shows, as well as more specialized programming, including health and wellness programs, children's educational shows, and classic movies.

The station is also launching a new community engagement initiative called "25 Acts of Kindness." Viewers are encouraged to submit videos of their own acts of kindness, which will be featured on the station's social media channels.

The new lineup will begin on September 1, with the introduction of a new talk show hosted by local personality, Mary Jane. The show will focus on discussing local news, events, and issues that affect the community.

In addition to the new programming, Channel 25 will continue to feature its popular news programs, including "25 News at 6," "25 News at 10," and "25 News on Saturday." The station will also continue to produce its weekly entertainment shows, "25 on the Go" and "25 at the Movies."
