Bungling Charged In New York Case

Dope-Pushing Police Detective Goes Free

NEW YORK CITY - Because of bungling by local government officials and a New York judge, a New York City detective accused of smuggling heroin from abroad was released from prison just days before his scheduled trial.

The detective, a 35-year-old man named Henry Williams, was arrested in May on charges of smuggling heroin and cocaine into the United States.

The judge, who has since recused himself from the case, granted Williams' bail request, allowing him to return to his home in the Bronx.

The case has raised questions about the adequacy of the New York police force's efforts to combat drug smuggling.
