Tulsa Faces Trial For Rape

VAN NESS - A 1976 trial for a rape in Oklahoma reflected the changing times of the 1970s, when rape was no longer seen as a private matter or as a personal crime against a woman.

The trial, which lasted for three weeks in the late 1970s, was held in the Van Ness County Courthouse. The defendant was a 19-year-old man who had been accused of raping a 17-year-old girl in a rural area of the county.

The trial was marked by intense public interest, with crowds gathering outside the courthouse each day. The defendant was convicted and sentenced to 15 years in prison.

The case was significant because it highlighted the changing attitudes towards rape in the 1970s. At the time, rape was still often viewed as a personal crime, and women were not always believed when they spoke out about their experiences.

The trial also brought attention to the need for better protection for women and for more resources to be directed towards preventing and addressing sexual assault.

Business Briefs

BOMBING MOTIVE UNKNOWN

BARTLESVILLE, OKLAHOMA - Authorities in Oklahoma were investigating a bomb threat made against a local business.

The threat was made by telephone, and the caller said they had placed a bomb in the building and that it would explode in an hour.

The building was evacuated, and police and bomb technicians were called to the scene. The bomb was found to be a fake, and the caller was later arrested.

The motive for the threat was unknown, and investigators were trying to determine the identity of the caller.

Step Signs Are Covered

Braunton, Nebr. -ownt has taken steps to ensure that signage is accessible to all visitors.

The city has replaced old, outdated signs with new, modern ones that are more visible and easier to read.

The new signs include Braille and large print for those with visual impairments, and they also feature symbols for wheelchair users.

The changes are part of the city's efforts to make Braunton more accessible to all residents and visitors.
