Scotty doesn't know how to drive yet...but he's learning.

Whether he's standing by the railing or on the deck, Scotty's a young man who likes to0 be out and about while he's young. His parents say he's always getting into some sort of trouble, whether it's playing cards or hitchhiking with strangers.

His latest stunt was when he tried to help a stuck car on the road. He got into a big argument with the driver and ended up in jail. His parents say they're worried about his future, but they're also proud of him for trying to help others.

They're hoping he'll grow up and settle down, but for now, they're just glad he's safe and sound.

Mysterious Surge Detected In Far-Off Radio Source

WASHINGTON — A series of mysterious surges of radio waves in the atmosphere has suddenly increased by energy more than 100 times its normal level during the past month. The surges are being detected at radio observatories all over the world. The phenomenon may make the earth feel like a giant magnet.

The surges, which are being especially noticed by amateur radio operators, are being measured by sensitive radio receivers at the observatories. They show a sudden increase in the radio signals, with some surges lasting for an hour or more. The surges are causing some interference with radio communications.

The surges are particularly noticeable at night, and some operators have reported that they are able to detect them even over long distances. The phenomenon is still unexplained, and it is not yet clear what causes the surges. It is possible that they are related to solar activity or to some other phenomenon in the earth's atmosphere.
