Unless you're a TV serviceman

These solid state color systems are the most serviceable we've ever built. Because independent servicers helped us design them.

Independent service was as simple as servicing a given color set. It's true that GE's service departments have experienced and specialized TV servicemen. GE's new solid state color sets offer the same advantages as the solid state color systems: they're easier to service. GE's new solid state color systems are designed to be serviceable. With the simple use of a few tools, any serviceman can repair them. And if a serviceman cannot repair them, he can return them to a service center near him. GE's new solid state color systems are designed to be serviceable. With the simple use of a few tools, any serviceman can repair them. And if a serviceman cannot repair them, he can return them to a service center near him.

But if you plan to spend $200 to $600 for a TV this fall, you may find it critical.

But if you plan to spend $200 to $600 for a TV this fall, you may find it critical.

The sale of televisions has been one of the most successful in recent years. The average price of a television in the United States is now around $1000. However, this price tag may be too high for many people.

GE is the only manufacturer to give you 100% solid state in 10", 16", 19" and 25" diagonal screen sizes.
