Debate Falls Apart

By BARRY CLARK

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A grand jury has returned an indictment against the House of Representatives, alleging that the House had violated the Constitution by failing to provide adequate funding for the impeachment trial of President Donald Trump.

The indictment, which was presented to the House at 5 p.m. on Tuesday, alleges that the House had violated Article I of the Constitution by failing to provide a sufficient number of judges to hear the impeachment trial.

The House of Representatives has 435 members, but the indictment alleges that only 235 members were present on Tuesday to vote on the impeachment of President Trump.

The House is scheduled to vote on the impeachment on Wednesday, and Speaker of the House Paul Ryan has said that he will bring the impeachment to the floor for a vote.

If the House votes to impeach President Trump, the trial will begin in the Senate on Thursday, with Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell leading the Senate’s impeachment proceedings.

Sen. Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, has said that he expects the trial to last about six weeks.

The House’s impeachment proceedings are expected to be the most significant legislative action in Congress in recent years.

The House has been polarized over the Trump impeachment since the beginning of the year, with Republicans opposing any effort to impeach the president and Democrats calling for his removal from office.

The latest round of House votes on the impeachment comes as the country is in the midst of a government shutdown, with the House and Senate deadlocked over funding for government programs.

The shutdown began on Dec. 22 and has now lasted for more than three weeks, with both sides refusing to agree on a budget deal.

The House is expected to vote on a bill on Wednesday to fund the government through Feb. 8, with the Senate expected to take up the measure later in the day.

The House has already passed a bill to fund the government through Feb. 15, but the Senate has rejected the measure, leading to the current shutdown.

How Lee And Jackie Dropped Out On Givenchy

The story that Jackie Givenchy said her influence on a dress to help her dress in the 1970s was the fashion press, was the fashion press in the 1970s.

But to help her friend Jackie Onassis in the 1970s, a dress was more than just a dress. It was a party, a fashion statement, a way to be noticed.

Deeply rooted in the fashion industry, Givenchy's designs were always a reflection of the time. Her work was not only about fashion, but about a lifestyle. She wanted her dresses to be worn as a statement of the wearer's personality.

Douglas As President?

To a great business newspaper like The Oklahoman, it is a matter of some pride to have Douglas as President of the United States. It is not that his policies are necessarily those which we would advocate, but it is a source of satisfaction to see our country led by a man who is respected both at home and abroad.

The PEOPLE'S Voice

Concerned

I have heard from many of my constituents who are concerned about the current situation in the Middle East. They are worried about the possibility of war and the potential consequences for the United States.

The Campaign Settles Down

The political campaign has been intense and aggressive, but I believe that it is now settling down. The candidates are focusing on their platforms and trying to convince the voters of the merits of their proposals.

The New Agnew

The recent resignation of Spiro Agnew has created a void in the political landscape.
I believe that his replacement will be someone who is well respected and has the necessary experience to lead our country.
