Consumer Cost Still On Rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — The administration, looking for a way out of the economic recession, is considering cutting government spending to $18 billion to $20 billion in the next fiscal year, a source said. The proposed cut would come in an attempt to slow inflation and encourage economic growth.

The source said the administration is considering a variety of spending cuts, including cuts to defense and social programs. The cuts would be aimed at reducing the federal budget deficit and improving the fiscal health of the government.

The White House has been under pressure from Congress to reduce spending and pare down the budget deficit. The administration is expected to release a detailed budget plan in the coming weeks.

The proposed cuts come as the economy faces a number of challenges, including high unemployment and slow growth. The administration is hoping to find a way to stimulate the economy and create jobs without increasing the deficit.

The proposed cuts would affect a wide range of programs and services, including education, health care, and environmental protection. The administration is expected to announce the details of the proposed cuts in the coming weeks.

U.S. Ends Subsidy For Wheat Exports

WASHINGTON (AP) — The administration has ended a subsidy program for wheat exports, a move that is expected to save the government $1 billion per year. The subsidy program, which covered 80% of the cost of shipping wheat, was a major source of funding for U.S. farmers.

The subsidy program was first introduced in the 1930s as a way to help farmers sell their surplus wheat. It was phased out gradually over the years, but it was not completely eliminated until now.

The elimination of the subsidy program is expected to have a significant impact on the wheat industry. Farmers are likely to see a decrease in exports, which could lead to a decrease in prices.

The subsidy program was supported by the agricultural industry and by some politicians, who argued that it helped to stabilize prices and protect farmers. However, the program was also criticized by some economists, who argued that it was a inefficient way to support farmers and that it had negative impacts on the economy.

The elimination of the subsidy program is part of a broader effort by the administration to reduce government spending and improve the fiscal health of the government. Other initiatives include cuts to social programs and tax increases.
