"This election is not just a contest of personality, but of ideas. The American people have a right to know the ideas of the candidates, and the only way they will know them is through the debates," said Governor George Wallace of Alabama. The debates were held in a series of thirty-five states. "The balloting and the campaign have been costly, but the real cost is the damage done to our institutions and the erosion of our values. We must protect our way of life and our constitutional rights." The campaign was marked by a series of controversies, including the issue of race, the role of women, and the impact of foreign policy.
