City Police Open Ranks To Women

By NICK SMITH

The Oklahoma City Police Department will begin accepting applications Monday from women who want to become police officers. Chief Jerry Waters and Thursday.

Waters, who has been the chief since 1995, said his own experience in law enforcement has taught him that women are capable of being effective police officers. He added that the department’s efforts to recruit more female officers have been successful.

The new policy comes as part of a broader effort by police departments nationwide to increase diversity among their ranks. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, women make up about 18% of the police force in the United States.

Waters said the department is looking for candidates who have a strong commitment to public service and who are willing to work hard to achieve their goals. He added that the department is committed to providing a supportive and inclusive work environment for all its officers.

For more information about applying for a position as a police officer, visit the Oklahoma City Police Department’s website or call 405-297-6000.

Gas Price Boost Hidden By FPC

WASHINGTON (AP) — With speculation increasing that the government is preparing to release more crude oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, prices at the pump are rising.

The government is legally required to release oil from the reserve if the average price of a barrel of West Texas Intermediate crude oil exceeds $90 for 15 days.

Gasoline prices have risen in recent weeks as concerns aboutsupply disruptions in the Middle East have increased. The price of oil, which has been volatile, is currently around $85 a barrel.

The Energy Information Administration, the government agency that tracks energy prices, said Thursday that the average price of a gallon of gasoline in the United States was $2.46.

FBI Keeping Secret Bank Heist Losses

In Bank Heist

LOS ANGELES (AP) - FBI agents who had been hauling away more than $1 million in cash and jewelry from the scene of a bank robbery in Los Angeles yesterday evening said they were trying to determine how much of the loot had been successfully concealed.

The robbery, according to FBI agents, occurred during regular banking hours at the First National Bank of Los Angeles. Agents said that the robyers entered the building after convincing the employees to open the vault.

A spokesman for the FBI said that the robyers initially took some of the employees hostage to force them to open the vault. The robbers then emptied the vault and fled in a small van.

The FBI agents said that they were still trying to determine how much of the cash and jewelry was actually taken. They said that they were investigating the possibility that the robyers had used a getaway car.

Programmer's Guild Officers Declare War on the United States Army

The programmers at California State University, Los Angeles, have declared war on the United States Army. The programmers, who are part of the school's military ROTC program, said that they will no longer accept orders from the Army.

The programmers said that they were fed up with the Army's attempts to undermine their school's computer department. They said that the Army had been trying to recruit programmers to work for them, but the programmers had refused to go.

"We're fed up with the Army's attempts to " recruiting our programmers," said Programmer's Guild President Tom Smith. "We're going to stand up for our school and our department."

The Army had been trying to recruit programmers to work on a project that would involve developing a new computer system for the Army's headquarters. The programmers said that they were not interested in working on the project, and that they had declined the Army's offers.

The Army had offered to pay the programmers $50,000 per year to work on the project. The programmers said that they were not interested in the money, and that they were not interested in working for the Army.

The Army had also offered to provide the programmers with a government provided housing allowance, and to provide the programmers with free meals at the Army's mess hall.

The programmers said that they were not interested in the housing allowance, and that they were not interested in free meals at the Army's mess hall. They said that they wanted to work for their school, and that they wanted to work for a company that was interested in their work.

The programmers said that they were going to stand up for their school and their department. They said that they were going to continue to work for the school, and that they were going to continue to work for a company that was interested in their work.
