Legislator Urges Incentive Raises

By ROBERT DAVIS

The new chairman of the Senate education committee, Sen. Frank G. Dwyer, on Thursday, announced his support for legislation that would provide incentives to attract skilled workers to the state.

Dwyer said the incentives should be expanded to include more than just financial benefits. He emphasized the need for a comprehensive approach to address the issue of skilled labor shortage.

He added that the incentives should be targeted to specific industries and regions where there is a critical need for skilled workers.

The incentives could include tax breaks, reduced regulatory requirements, and other measures to make it more attractive for businesses to provide training and develop the skills of their employees.

The Senate passed a bill last year that provided incentives for companies to invest in employee training, but Dwyer believes more needs to be done.

He said the incentives should be part of a broader strategy to address the shortage of skilled labor.

The House has already passed similar legislation, and Dwyer is hopeful that the state can move forward on this issue soon.

"We cannot afford to wait any longer," Dwyer said. "We need to take action now to address the shortage of skilled workers in our state."
