State Editors Say

Pushing The Panic Button On Gas

The present blackouts are a perfect example of what our energy policy has become. The Federal government has failed to take the necessary steps to ensure that the nation's energy needs are met, leading to a situation where the public is forced to panic. It is time for a change in our approach to energy management.

Klassen Quits Amid FBI Probe

WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan was under increasing pressure yesterday to fire Attorney General Edwin Meese III after it was revealed that FBI agents had been monitoring the private lives of opposition politicians, including Bill Clinton.

From the White House, Reagan's spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, offered a scathing attack on Meese, the man he had chosen to head the Justice Department.

"This has got to stop," Fitzwater said. "We all understand the need for law enforcement and for the investigation of wrongdoing, but we do not condone the kind of conduct that took place here.

The scandal at the FBI has continued to grow, with revelations that agents had spied on political figures and monitors of the private lives of opposition politicians. The FBI, which is the nation's premier law enforcement agency, has been implicated in a variety of abuses.

But Reagan, who has consistently defended Meese and resisted calls for his resignation, offered no indication yesterday that he was about to fire the attorney general.

In a number of related developments, the FBI director, William H. Webster, was called to Capitol Hill to testify before a joint congressional committee investigating the scandal.

The FBI had been under scrutiny for months, but the situation reached a new level of intensity yesterday when it was disclosed that agents had spied on private citizens and opposition politicians.

The revelation came as FBI agents were pursuing an investigation into the private lives of political figures, including Bill Clinton, who is considered a possible candidate for the presidency in 1992.
