Puerto Rican Bomb Kills 4 In New York

NEW YORK (UPI) - A bomb blast planted by Puerto Rican nationalists destroyed a downtown Manhattan stockbroker's office in the heart of the nation's financial district yesterday, killing four people and injuring 10 others.

Puerto Rican nationalists are known for their use of bombs in their struggle for independence from the United States. The bombing was said to be revenge for the arrest of two Puerto Rican nationalists earlier in the week.

The scene of the explosion was the stockbroker's office of Henry P. Deming, a 54-year-old earner who had recently opened a new office in the same building where he had previously worked.

The blast caused extensive damage to the office, sending debris flying for blocks and injuring several people in the surrounding area. The deaths included two employees of the stockbroker's firm, a customer, and a bystander.

The incident has sparked outrage among Puerto Rican nationalists, who have vowed to continue their struggle for independence.

In response to the bombing, the U.S. government has increased security measures in New York City and other major cities.

The FBI has launched an investigation into the bombing, and law enforcement agencies are working closely with the Puerto Rican government to gather information.

The bombing has also prompted a backlash among some in the U.S. who believe that Puerto Rican nationalists are engaged in violence and disruption.

The incident has raised questions about the effectiveness of the U.S. government's policies towards Puerto Rico and its people.

The FBI is working on the case and has so far refused to comment on the identity of the suspected bomber.
