Governor Raps State Pay Hikes

By HOWARD DAVIES

Oklahoma City—Mr. Lodge Builders

Oklahoma City taxpayers apparently are more than pleased with their pay raises, according to two studies which show the average of nearly $6,000 in federal salary since 1969, was increased by a $2,500 raise which became effective Oct. 1.

In view of this, the city council must be taking note of the latest news in the state, the councilman who has been denied pay raises for two years, said the recently hired Mr. Lodge Builders.

The Oklahoma City council, in its final meeting of the year, adopted a resolution calling for a $900 pay raise for the mayor and $700 for the council members. The council has yet to act on the proposed raises for the mayor, who is now $1,100 a year short of the minimum $3,000, his assistant mayor, who is $1,000 a year short of the minimum $2,000, and the council members, who are $2,000 a year short of the minimum $2,000.

BY ROY HASTINGS

Tulsa Mayor Frank Rader has rejected the City Council's proposal to cut the sales tax rate from 5.25% to 3.75%. The mayor's action follows the filing of a lawsuit by one of the city's largest employers, Home Depot, which seeks to challenge the constitutionality of the tax cut.

Widow Continues Husband's Work

By TIM FIELDS

ST. FRANCIS, Ind. (AP) - Nola M. Macklin, widow of the late Dr. William S. Macklin, who died in 1977, has continued her husband's work in the field of family planning.

Dr. Macklin, who was a pioneer in the field of family planning, established the first family planning clinic in the United States in 1921. He was also a member of the American Medical Association and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

Dr. Macklin's widow, Nola, has continued his work by establishing a clinic in St. Francis, Ind., where she provides family planning services.

She said, "I felt it was important to carry on the work that my husband started, to help those who need it."

A noted history professor lectured recently to a civic club. As he was tracing culture, art and religion through the years, he made an observation: “Most of the religions of the world have possessed a uniting characteristic throughout history. They represent a concentrated effort on the part of man to know about the gods and appease them. Speaking purely from the standpoint of a historian, I must admit that Christianity stands out as a unique faith. It tells us that God revealed Himself to mankind and that men do not have to merit their standing with Him.”

Many people feel that Christianity too, teaches that we must earn our relationship with God. Certainly the New Testament makes much of the good things Christians are to do, but it also implies that we merit heaven by doing them. Instead, the Scriptures state that we are brought into a relationship with God through faith. This faith evidences itself in the good things we do. Faith becomes the root out of which the fruit of the works is produced.

When Paul wrote the Book of Second Corinthians, he urged the Corinthian Christians to take an offering for the suffering believers in Jerusalem. At that time, many of the Christians were jobless and some had lost their property simply because they were Christians. The great Apostle could not understand why anyone who had the same faith these people had could fail to help them. Paul mentioned the liberality of Christians in Macedonia who sacrificed the point of personal suffering to help other people. They were willing to do this because they had given themselves to Christ first.

Paul and James have sometimes been pictured as being in conflict about what was important in Christian faith.

International Sunday School Lesson

The New Testament makes much of the idea of balance. It never discounts the importance of the good things people do for others. It does point out that these works cannot make us right with God. Faith does that. But faith is more than emotional faith. It is a personal commitment to God that changes our lives and makes us sensitive to the needs of others and to the service to God and our fellowmen. A faith that is real evidences itself in the way that people live. There is a vital link between Christian belief and Christian behavior. — Richard B. Douglas
