200 Share Problems With Governor

By RICHARD DAVIS

Gov. David W. Lourie has brokered the settlement of a $200 million share dispute that has delayed the issuance of bonds for state projects. The agreement, announced last week, brings an end to a long and contentious battle over the allocation of bonds between city and county governments.

The dispute, which dates back to 1992, involves the allocation of bonds for infrastructure projects such as roads, schools, and parks. The city had been seeking more bonds for city projects, while the county favored a more even distribution.

The settlement includes $150 million in bonds for city projects and $50 million for county projects. The city is also agreeing to a gentleman's agreement not to challenge the settlement in court.

The settlement is expected to be signed into law next week, allowing the issuance of bonds for the projects.

Early Christians Promoted Harmony

Recently a young lawyer accepted a low-paying job with a foundation working with the "emerging nations" of the world. When he was asked why he took a 75 percent cut in salary, he replied: "There is so much strife in the world. I hope that I can help bring some harmony and peace among the people of the world." Promoting peace and harmony meets an urgent need in a divided world. This role emerged early in Christian history as an important part of the Christian's responsibility. The approach differed radically from some of the modern secular methods, though. Paul described the work of the Christians as "the ministry of reconciliation." He claimed that each believer becomes an "ambassador for Christ." Paul saw the principal problem of man as a sin problem. Men live out of harmony with God. They rebel against God's authority in their lives. The first task of the Christian is to restore harmony between a person and God. Only then can there be the right kind of unity among people. The idea of reconciliation is to bring individuals who are out of harmony into a state of agreement and peace. As representatives of Christ, Christians help bring this harmony among people and God. Then they strive to bring it between individuals.

The first qualification for a reconciler is that he must first be reconciled. In II Corinthians, chapter five, Paul describes the individual who has been reconciled to God. He becomes so radically changed that it is like becoming a whole new creation. The sins of such a person are no longer held against them. God commissions them to become His representatives in presenting the good news of salvation to others. The transformed individual should become a changer of his world.

Christians strive to be like Jesus Christ. The apostle maintained that Christ came into the world to reconcile people to God. We are like him when we are serving the role of the peacemaker between God and men. Then we become peacemakers among men and men, also. Two individuals who have harmony with God have a basis for coming into harmony with each other.

In Galatians, Paul described how the Christian helps create harmony among people. He builds on the foundation of the individual's relationship to God. The burdens of the other person are shared by the reconciler. When he knows that someone else ministers in Christ's name, an effort is made to strengthen and sustain that ministry. The reconciler bears his own responsibilities while willingly helping someone else with his. This spirit of selflessness and concern for others provides an atmosphere in which the believer can bring harmony among individuals.

As ambassadors for Christ, Christians have a continuing responsibility to bring peace for people with God and promote it among the people of the world. (The preceding column by Richard B. Doughlass is based on a study of the International Sunday School Lesson in II Cor. 5:16-21 and Ga. 6:17.)

Lutherans Celebrate
