The White House Easter Monday lawn party!

The Funny Bunny and the Easter Bunny hop to Washington!

Right now, planners at the White House are getting ready for the annual Easter Sunday Egg Roll on the south lawn.

The Mini Page went to last year's event. Over 18,000 people took part in the fun that lasted from 10 in the morning until 3 in the afternoon.

This is really a kids' thing. Even looking security guards won't let adults in unless they are with a child.

The main entertainment included a stage show, music by military bands, parades and floats, Easter egg roll and the egg decorating contest.

The Easter Egg Roll

The Easter egg roll, for kids eight and under, took place in one corner of the lawn. Eight lanes were marked off with ribbons. Using spoons from the White House kitchen, the children rode their own eggs down a course that was 10 yards long.

Egg Decorating Contest

Every half hour, judges picked a new batch of winners for the egg decorating contest. The prizes were certificates or writing pens with Nixon's signature on them. At the end of the day, the eight top winners were announced.
