SEA GULLS - The United States Senate was in a state of shock on Friday, as it was bombarded with a wave of attacks from a group of senators who were demanding an end to the so-called "anti-war" movement. The senators, led by Senator John F. Kennedy, were calling for a "clear and immediate" end to the war in Vietnam, arguing that the United States was being "washed up" by the anti-war movement.

The Senate debate was marked by a heated exchange between Senator Kennedy and Senator Richard B. Russell of Georgia. Russell, a strong supporter of the war, praised the military effort and accused the anti-war movement of "sabotaging" the war effort. Kennedy, on the other hand, argued that the anti-war movement was "peaceful" and "constructive" and urged the Senate to support a "clear and immediate" end to the war.

The Senate vote was 72 to 28 in favor of a joint resolution to end the war in Vietnam. The resolution was sponsored by Senator Kennedy and co-sponsored by Senator Russell. The resolution was expected to pass the House of Representatives later in the day.

In other news, President John F. Kennedy announced today that he would travel to Europe next week for a series of meetings with European leaders. The president said he would use the trip to discuss the situation in Vietnam and other world problems.

The president also announced that he would be releasing $2 billion in additional military aid to South Vietnam. This aid would be used to support the government of South Vietnam in its efforts to defend itself against the communist forces.

The president's announcement was met with widespread support from both Republicans and Democrats in Congress. Senator Kennedy praised the president's decision, saying that it was "a wise and necessary" step in the fight against communism.

Senator Russell, on the other hand, expressed concern that the additional military aid might be used to "foment" further violence in Vietnam. However, he said he would support the president's decision if it was "necessary to protect American lives and interests."
