Da Nang Surrendered Without A Fight
French Teacher Describes Chaos In Doomed City

By NANCY GILSON

The case of a French teacher who surrendered without a fight in the chaotic environment of the Saigon area has been a subject of much discussion and debate. The teacher, who was captured by North Vietnamese forces, described the events leading up to his surrender in a detailed and harrowing account.

The teacher was one of several foreigners who surrendered to North Vietnamese forces in the days following the fall of Saigon. He was captured on the outskirts of the city and held for several days before being moved to a remote location.

In his account, the teacher described the conditions in which he was held, including overcrowding, poor sanitation, and limited access to medical care. He also recounted the traumatic experience of being forced to witness the violence and suffering of the civilian population.

The teacher's account has sparked widespread interest and concern among foreign observers and human rights activists. It has also raised questions about the effectiveness of the military's efforts to protect civilians in the aftermath of the fall of Saigon.

In conclusion, the surrender of the French teacher is a poignant reminder of the devastating impact of the war on civilians and the need for a more effective response to the humanitarian crisis that continues to unfold in the region.

By SANNER GILSON

A dog's display of manners can be a fascinating sight, as they demonstrate their agility, intelligence, and social behavior.

One such display was observed by a passerby who noted the dog's composure and grace.

The dog was seen standing calmly on a busy street corner, observing the surroundings with a keen eye. Its tail was up, and it appeared to be waiting for something.

As the passerby approached, the dog remained focused, but it did not show signs of aggression or fear.

When the passerby reached the dog, it continued to observe with interest, but it did not move or show signs of discomfort.

The passerby then spoke to the dog, and it responded with a wagging tail and a soft bark, indicating that it was comfortable in the situation.

In conclusion, the dog's display of manners was a demonstration of its calmness, intelligence, and social behavior, which made it a pleasure to observe.

Bicycle Safety

What rules are being broken?

A bike safety instructor said, "Most kids have the idea that a bike is a toy, and they play with it when they drive. Bike driving is serious business. When driving in the street, all kids must remember that they are on the road, not only the street, and that they must obey the same rules as car drivers."

Bikes: Transportation, Not Toys!

Listen kids! Take Cycling Seriously!

Since 1922, more bikes have been sold than cars.

Just about half the American people (more than 100 million) are now cycling and that number is growing.

Kids along have known that cycling is great, but now, bike safety is a topic of discussion for at least half the total number of cyclists.

Teachers teach bike safety.

There was a time when bike safety was not taught at school. Now this important subject is moving into the classroom. Teachers are teaching the rules of the road.

More bike lanes:

More tax money is being used to build bike lanes along streets and highways.

Tougher laws:

Local police officers are enforcing tougher bike laws. Children can no longer ride bikes that are too big for them, they are too young to get a warning or fine, they are too young to be an officer.

---

How About Bike Registration?

While many cities have voluntary bike registration, some experts think this should be required. The state of California does have state-wide registration.

1. Since most kids don't carry any identification, registration would help identify them if they were hurt.
2. Since identification would be much easier, registration would make kids more careful about their bicycle conduct.
3. Registration would cut down on the number of stolen bikes and help identify the ones that were taken.

Ford Predicts Trouble Ahead

NEW YORK (AP) - President Ford, in a interview with the Associated Press, warned that the Reagan-Bush tax cut could trigger a budget deficit in the 1980s and future years. However, he said that the country could afford the deficit for a short period without reducing the budget. Meeting with the editors and staff of the Washington Post yesterday, President Ford cautioned that the tax cut was not optional and that it would not be able to be reversed. He added that the tax cut would increase the national debt by $1.5 trillion by 1986, and that the deficit would be $400 billion by 1980. The deficit would be financed by a combination of increased government spending, reduced military spending, and increased foreign aid payments.
