Logjam On Judicial Pay Cleared Away

By RICHARD DAVIS

The Oklahoma Journal

Recent court-ordered action Monday failed to stop judicial salaries from being increased, but legislators are divided on whether the court's action is a success. The court-ordered action, which was met with resistance from some lawmakers, may have set the stage for a showdown over the future of the judicial system. The court's ruling on judicial pay was made based on the state's constitution, which states that the judiciary should be independent of the executive branch. However, the ruling has been met with criticism from some lawmakers who argue that the court has overstepped its bounds. The court's action may have set the stage for a showdown over the future of the judicial system, with some lawmakers calling for a referendum on the matter.
