Fighting Closes In On Phnom Penh

PHNOM PENH (UPI) — Khmer Rouge insurgents fought their bitterest battle of this year here Wednesday in a three-hour gun battle with government troops in the capital.

As the guns rang out, the battle moved toward an even more intense stage as a heavy artillery exchange continued.

Government and Khmer Rouge forces have been battling for the control of the capital since December, when the rebels began their advance into the city.

In the most recent battle, the Khmer Rouge troops, who had been encircled by government forces for weeks, launched a counterattack in an attempt to retake the city.

The battle ended Saturday as government forces pushed the rebels out of the city and took control of the last remaining Khmer Rouge positions.

The move has been seen as a significant victory for the government, which has been beset by internal divisions and political instability in recent years.

In the aftermath of the battle, government troops have been patrolling the city to prevent any further clashes.

The Khmer Rouge, a guerrilla group that ruled Cambodia from 1975 to 1979, has been fighting a civil war against the government for decades.

The battle is part of a wider conflict in the region, with other countries and insurgent groups also involved in fighting the government.

The battle has also sparked international concerns about the stability of the region and the potential for increased violence.

The government has been praised for its efforts to combat the insurgents, and international leaders have expressed support for the government's efforts.

The battle has also prompted concerns about the impact on the civilian population, with reports of widespread destruction and human rights abuses.

In recent years, the government has sought to stabilize the situation through negotiations with the Khmer Rouge, but these efforts have so far been unsuccessful.

The government has been targets of international sanctions and has been subject to powerful pressures to end the conflict.

The battle has also been a significant test for the government's ability to address the challenges of the conflict and to build a stable and prosperous society.

The battle has been accompanied by a significant increase in aid flows from international donors, who have pledged billions of dollars to support the government's efforts.

Sex Bias Law Axed by Court

The San Antonio Times-News Service

The United States Supreme Court has upheld an appeal concerning the term "sex" bias in the legal definition of sex discrimination. The court ruled that the term "sex" bias should include both males and females in a legal definition of sex discrimination. The decision came in a case involving the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) and a female employee who claimed she was denied promotions because of her sex. The court did not issue specific legal guidelines, however, saying that the issue was too complex to be resolved in a single ruling. The EEOC has the authority to issue guidelines for the interpretation of the term "sex" bias, and the court left it to the EEOC to make that determination.

Towns, Farms Face Bleak Future If Rock Island Closes

By DAVE SORKIN

Rock Island terminal in Jacksonville will become the last major rail defendant if the Rock Island Joint Line, the railroad that serves 18 states, fails to reach an agreement with its current owner, Illinois Terminal Co.

If the railroad fails, it will affect the entire region, including Jacksonville, where the terminal is located.

The Rock Island line is the last major rail link between the Northeast and the Southeast, and its failure could lead to the loss of jobs and economic activity in the region.

The Rock Island terminal in Jacksonville is one of the largest and most important terminals in the country, serving more than 700 companies and 3,000 employees.

If the terminal were to close, it would have a ripple effect on the local economy, with businesses and industries relying on the railroad to transport goods and services.

The Rock Island line is also a major player in the transportation of coal, grain, and other commodities, and a failure could lead to a significant disruption in these industries.

Downtown Jacksonville, where the terminal is located, has a long history as a transportation hub, dating back to the early 19th century.

The Rock Island line was founded in 1852 as the Illinois Central Railroad, and it has been a major player in the region's economy ever since.

If the terminal were to close, it would be a major setback for the local economy and a loss for the region.

The Rock Island line has been in operation for more than 150 years, and it has played a crucial role in the region's history and development.

If the railroad were to fail, it would be a major loss for the region and for the nation as a whole.

The Rock Island line is a vital link in the nation's transportation network, and it is essential for the movement of goods and people across the country.
