I am Lovable and Capable

Here's an experiment: that will make everyone in your room at school more aware of each other's feelings.

Have teachers and students write I AM LOVABLE AND CAPABLE and their name on a sign. They will pin on and wear all day. Each time someone says something that hurts a person's feelings, he should tear off a part of the sign and give it to that person. See how much is left of the sign at the end of the day.

You might want to try this for a whole week. Start each day with a new sign.

Feelings Try 'N Find

Feelings are hidden in the blend below. They run across and down. See how many you can find.

What Would You Do?

Sam got very angry at his best friend because he kept teasing him. What should he do?

Start a fight?

Talk it over with him and ask him to stop.

Say nothing and try to forget it.

Run home and start beating his little brother.

How Are You Feeling?

Bally is jealous of her little sister. Jon gets very angry at his mother. Lux is thrilled and surprised at his birthday party. Patty was bored at the movie. Jane was sad about her puppy's death.

These are all feelings that adults as well as children have, and every person handles them differently.

The Mini Page interviewed a psychologist (a person who studies how you feel and behave) to find out about kids and feelings.

How should we feel about our feelings?

"Don't be upright about your feelings. They are a natural way of letting us know where we stand. Don't be embarrassed or feel guilty about them. The more you are in touch with your feelings, the better you can handle your actions."

What can children do about feelings?

"One way children can handle their feelings is to share them with a person they like and trust, like a teacher, parent or friend. Sharing honest feelings is a good basis for friendship."

What about other people's feelings?

"It is important to tune into other people and to respect their feelings as much as you would like them to respect yours."

Especially for young readers

Birth Rate Up

The number of children born to American mothers is increasing, according to new government statistics. In the first quarter of the year, 1.5 million babies were born, a 5% increase from the previous year. This is the highest birth rate in 10 years.

The increase is due to a combination of factors, including a rise in the average age of mothers, an increase in the number of women in the workforce, and a growing acceptance of alternative family planning methods.

The rise in births is also being attributed to the increase in abortions, as women are choosing to terminate pregnancies before they become too advanced.

The government is urging parents to consider the long-term implications of having children, as the current population growth is expected to put a strain on resources in the future.
